

Goodbye rampart, welcome ph!

It's been almost a year now since phunsites was relaunched after a rather long time of absence.

I remember writing my first post, which expressed my doubts that I would ever find enough time to create a unique web design.

However, after reflecting about phunsites and the achievements made so far, I finally decided to climb the mountain.

A great deal of work has already been completed, including creating the new design, adding link redirects, changing article references and micj more.

But there is still plenty of work to do, which includes re-implementing the photo gallery and the media archive (changeing their original web design will be driving me crazy for sure...) and fixing some minor glitches here and there.

As you've propably noticed, there is also a drastic change in the site structure itself. While there was just "Phlog" (Phunsites Blog) in the past, the site will be divided into several subsites in the future.

"Phlog" was already replaced the "phaq" (Phunsites FAQ), which will however cover the same tech topics as before. With "phersonal" (Phunsites Personal) a new sidekick covering primarily personal topics has been added to the site.

And for the inpatient ones who can't wait for new topics on Phlog/phaq: Yes, there are some new articles underway, including the FreeBSD software RAID benchmarks promised a few days ago.

It's time. Let's farewell "rampart" and welcome the new ph! style. Enjoy!